KNOW The WEATHER

By E. H. Sims

What are the easiest summer clues to observe in deciding the probability of rain during the day?

One of the easy clues used in summer concerns dew. If there is a heavy dew in the morning, chances are that no rain will occur-unless it is an isolated thundershower.

Another easily - observed clue is the height of the small, white cumbus clouds in the early morning. If they are very low, you will probably have thunder showers during the day.

Therefore if there is heavy dew in the morning, coupled with very few white cloud puffs, and those very high, your chances of a dry day are quite good.

The swimming season reminds us to remind everybody, young and old, to be careful in the water.

Hint to swimmers: Don't try to show the crowd how far you can swim -you might not get back.

If you are very good, or very smart, somebody will eventually discover it without your bragging about it.
